McKnight decides not to seek new term as judge

BY SUE MASON
STAFF WRITER

Change is coming to Westland's 18th District Court, following the announcement this week that longtime jurist Gail McKnight will retire and not seek a fifth term.

McKnight made the announcement in advance of the March 27 filing deadline for incumbent judges to file for the Aug. 8 primary election.

"I haven't kept it a secret, but there are some very fine candidates who are interested in running for this position and they deserve to know my intentions,"

McKnight said in a prepared statement released Wednesday morning. "I have always worked hard to be worthy of the trust the voters have placed in me."

"Judge McKnight is certainly going to be missed," said Mayor Sandra Cicirelli of McKnight's decision. "She has been an ideal judge and has served this community well."

McKnight was appointed to the 18th District Court by former Gov. James Blanchard to fill a vacancy.

RE-ELECTED

McKnight took office in January 1985 and in 1986, was successful in being elected to serve out the remaining two years of Callanan's six-year term. She was re-elected in 1988, 1994 and 2000.

A Westland resident for more than 38 years, McKnight worked as a journalist before receiving her law degree from Wayne State University in 1976.

She worked as a clerk and did office work with her husband, Richard, also an attorney, before becoming a special assistant prosecuting attorney in Wayne County Juvenile Court in 1977. She went on to become an assistant Wayne County prosecuting attorney, and served in that capacity until her appointment to 18th District Court.

McKnight is proud of what she has accomplished during her time as a district judge. A strong Law Day advocate, she started the program that brings actual cases before students in Wayne-Westland schools.

"This program is probably the best way for families to understand the consequences of making bad choices," she said.

She also started the court's community garden where defendants grew vegetables for use by

Food Services gets Seuss-ified for March Is Reading Month

BY SUE MASON

You could blame it on Dr. Seuss. You could blame it on the Cat in the Hat. You could even blame it on St. Patrick's Day.

Green was in Friday in Wayne-Westland's elementary schools, even in the cafeterias where youngsters ate green eggs and ham, courtesy of the district Food Services Department.

Whether it was for breakfast or lunch, youngsters were served the Seuss-ified food as in what has become a March Is Reading Month tradition.

"I used to go to a different school each day and do the green eggs and ham," said Beth Sholler, the assistant food services director. "Our staff does it now and they do a wonderful job of getting the whole school involved."

At Wildwood, Cook Missy Sullivan went beyond just serving the youngsters in two shifts Friday morning. She had a Cat in the Hat coloring contest complete with prizes for the best artwork from each grade and the school's latchkey program.

She also brought in the Cat in the Hat - better known as Robin Borda - to meet and greet the youngsters. Surprisingly, people kept quiet about the Cat's identity, but that didn't stop youngsters from asking if she was "the real Cat in the Hat," said Borda, who got the job "because the suit fit."

"Missy and I put together the program and got the people motivated," she added. "It was fun."

"I got a line on a costume and thought it would be so cool," Sullivan said. "And when we found out it would fit, it just escalated. That's when we decided what we wanted to do."

Food Services Director Toni Makino estimates her department order 75 cases of eggs to provide the green concoction. There also was a like number of cases of ham as well as 60 cases of juice and muffins.

Probationers heed St. Paddy's Day call to court

BY SUE MASON
STAFF WRITER

St. Patrick's Day revelers were lining up Friday at establishments around Westland, including 18th District Court. They weren't there to party - far from it. They were reporting to court to be tested to see if they had been celebrating the Irish holiday by drinking.

And they proved it by blowing into a Breathalyzer. "It was a great success this year," said Eric Lange, deputy chief probation officer. "Two hundred ninety-nine people showed and everyone was negative."

This is a second time the department has had a selected group of probationers check in on St. Patrick's Day. Last year, 370 people were asked to come to the courthouse between 7 and 9 p.m. Some 352 people showed up, with two testing positive for drinking.

This year, the department sent out 320 letters a week in advance of the holiday, asking the probationers to report at four different times between 9:30 and 11:30 p.m. The week's notice left no opportunity for those receiving the letter to come up with an excuse not to show.

"We're not looking to catch people drinking, but to be more proactive," said Lange. "It's a friendly reminder more than a deterrent."

According to Lange, the department randomly selected probationers who had no alcohol is the condition of probation. The group included first-time offenders up to those with three-four or more offenses for drinking and driving.

Such checks are nothing new to repeat offenders on intense probation who check in once-twice a week up to every day. They also did a post-St. Patrick's Day check on Saturday.

"The night before Thanksgiving and St. Patrick's Day are the two biggest bar nights," Lange said. "So this is a good reminder, a good deterrent for people who are on probation."

Those probationers who chose not to check in will receive show cause summons this week to appear before Judge C. Charles Bokos to explain their absence. They face possible fines, jail time and/or community service for not reporting for the check, Lange said.

McClain gets fellowship to MSU leadership program

BY SUE MASON
STAFF WRITER

While he isn't what you'd call a college freshman, Terrance McClain is a new face on campus at Michigan State University.

The senior pastor at Annapolis Park Church of Christ and a member of the Wayne-Westland school board, McClain is among 24 people enrolled for the university's 2006 Michigan Political Leadership Program.

McClain received a $12,000 fellowship to attend the 10-month-long program that has a curriculum of practical politics, public policy analysis and process, personal leadership development and effective governance.

"I'm excited about making myself a better leader," said McClain. "It'll certainly help me on the board in working with my colleagues and the administration."

McClain found out about the program from the instructors of a Michigan Association of School Boards' introductory class for new school board members. Both instructors had attended the program and encourage McClain to apply.

He missed deadline for signing up for the 2004 program and didn't make the cut for 2005, but is among the 12 men and 12 women tapped for this year's program.

"I anticipate becoming a leader, so anything I can do to be a better one on the school board, in my congregation or the community helps," he said. "There's such a dearth of quality leadership, especially among minorities, and I want to be the person, the advocate to say you can

Poker pals play for a shot at the big pot

BY JAY M. GROSSMAN
STAFF WRITER

A former art teacher at a private Catholic school in Detroit has traded in her pastels and paint brushes for a pair of pocket aces.

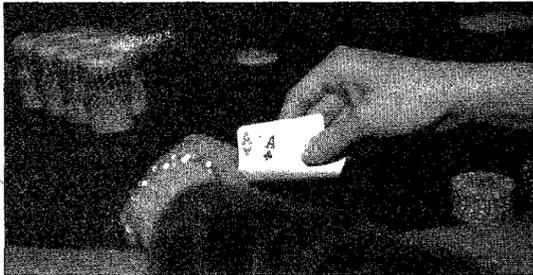

Sheryl DeRonne, 26, is quickly becoming the poker queen of southeast Michigan. The Southfield woman runs the Pioneer Poker League with her brother, Chris DeRonne, and Ferndale resident Adam Schomer.

They host free Texas Hold'em tournaments at various bars in Beverly Hills, Pontiac and Canton, while plans are in the works to start up new games in Troy and Rochester.

"Right now we have over 300 members and 15 bars participating," DeRonne said during a game at Brady's Tavern in Beverly Hills. "It's spreading like wildfire."

Poker chips are used in the game, but no money passes hands among the players. Instead, they accumulate points based on the number of winning hands.

The ultimate point winner earns a free trip to a major poker tournament in Las Vegas or some other hot-spot destination. One possibility is the Pocket aces - a player's dream comes true.

May 5 Rapper's Poker Tournament in Miami that's hosted by Snoopy Dogg himself.

The top player at that tournament walks away with a cool million dollars in cash.

"Can't you see it?" DeRonne said. "This unknown player from an unknown league in Detroit comes out of nowhere to take them all down."

Vanessa Fettig wants to be that player.

A clinical psychologist with a practice in Detroit, Fettig started playing poker 18 months ago. She already considers herself a pretty strong player with a decent understanding of the game.

"It's fun being a girl because the other players don't know how to read me," she said.

TOURNAMENT LOCATIONS

Locally, free Texas Hold'em tournaments can be found at:
 ■ 7 and 10 p.m. Wednesdays at the Shark Club, 42070 Ford Road, Canton. Call (734) 844-7665 for information.
 ■ 7 and 10 p.m. Mondays at the Bullfrog Bar & Grill, 15414 Telegraph Road, one block north of Five Mile, Redford. Call (313) 533-4477 for information.

"That's the angle I like to work when I'm playing."

Greg Rivard, 48, drives in from Rochester Hills each weekend to play at Brady's. He's honing his skills for the day when he can sit down at a casino and play the game with actual stakes.

"It's a perfect way to learn," he said. "Last month I made a major mistake that would have cost me a fortune in a real game."

Rivard also plays in a Pontiac game that's hosted by the league. He knows the mechanics of the game and is now concentrating on how to "read" his opponents by studying their playing habits.

"See those two players?" he said, pointing to Fettig and another young woman. "If they're in, it's a solid hand."

The three partners date their friendship back to their high school days at Birmingham Groves.

While Chris DeRonne headed out to Arizona, where he now lives, Sheryl DeRonne remained in Michigan and earned a bachelor's degree in fine arts from the University of Michigan. Schomer went into acting.

Sheryl DeRonne was an art teacher at St. Martin de Porres High School when the school closed last year. Before looking for another job, she decided to spend a few days with her brother in Arizona.

He took her to a poker tournament.

"It was a real comfortable atmosphere and that's what we're trying to recreate here," she said.

Once the two decided they wanted to organize a similar poker league in Michigan, Schomer was recruited to help out with the business end of the partnership.

It's his job to make sure the league complies with the Liquor Control Commission and other agencies that regulate gaming in Michigan.

Because gambling is illegal in Michigan without a license, the league cannot give away money or prizes. Instead, it "sponsors" top players and pays their way into poker tournaments around the country.

"Just like Nike would sponsor a snowboarder," Schomer said.

To learn more about the tournaments and how to play in one of the games, visit the group's Web site at www.pioneerpokerleague.com.

Children's lack of motor skills impacts learning

BY STEPHANIE ANGELYN CASOLA
STAFF WRITER

A child's ability to skip and jump rope in kindergarten might mean more to success in school than parents realize.

That's a key point made by Bob Sornson, an educator and founder of the Early Learning Foundation, during a presentation March 15 at Garfield Elementary School.

Sornson asked parents not to underestimate the importance of early language skills, sensory motor skills and a child's early elementary experience.

He said how a child sees himself or herself as a learner, a reader, and a problem-solver by age 9 is "pretty much how you stay the rest of your life." And activities like running, jumping and skipping are important indicators of learning success later on in life.

"Many kids are coming to school with language delays," said Sornson. "Many kids are coming to school with sensory motor delays."

He explained that children are starting school with poor balance, and social and behavioral issues.

He attributed all those concerns to children's exposure to too much television or too many video games - rather than playing outdoors with other children and being active.

"Nothing out there (on TV) is nearly as good as human interaction," he said, "real interaction with real human beings."

During his presentation Improving Motor Skills to Strengthen Learning for Life, Sornson shared the following statistics.

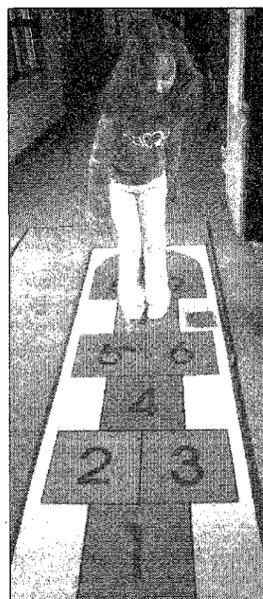

He said the average elementary student watches more than 30 hours of a television a week, in addition to videos and computer games. The recommended amount of time is under two hours of television, or no television time at all.

And Sornson noted that children experience 40 percent less play movement and exercise than kids did 40 years ago. He said that lack of movement can have a significant impact on brain development and on learning.

"They're not ready to be successful in the early years," he said.

Garfield Elementary School second-grader Robert Barns plays catch with parent volunteer Ellen O'Neil while balancing himself during his time to participate in the school's Motor Moms and Dads program.

Garfield Elementary School second-grader Sarah Kleiner runs through a hop-sotch station during her time in the motor skills program.

Sornson said children need stimulation in order for their bodies and brains to develop properly. They need to play and to interact. To develop balance, children can ride bicycles, jump rope, walk or inline skate. "Almost everything you do engages your balance system," said Sornson. "We've seen more children with compromised balance systems."

A good indicator of motor skill development, according to Sornson, is whether a child can skip smoothly and gracefully by the end of kindergarten. He said skipping requires both sides of the brain to work together, as do jumping jacks.

In an effort to promote exercise and movement, some elementary buildings within Livonia Public Schools offer the parent volunteer-based Motor Moms and Dads program.

Taking brief breaks from their classroom instruction, children in grades K-2 will run through a series of activities in the hallway. Parents oversee the activities. The stations often include balance beam, hopscotch, sit 'n spin, balance toss and crossover step. Each activity helps enhance a child's motor skill development.

Both the Motor Moms and Dads program and the recent presentation by Sornson are part of a districtwide effort to meet the needs of today's preschool students and early elementary students. Ready Set Go! is an early learning initiative in Livonia

Public Schools which supports the development of young children by offering learning activities, strategies for discipline and helpful hints for parents. It grew out of the work of a committee of elementary principals, starting in 1999.

Joan Johnson, supervisor of preschool programs at Jackson Early Childhood Center, said the committee has been working to find new and different ways to reach out to parents and to preschoolers. And the initiative continues to grow and expand throughout the district.

The next Ready Set Go! event will feature an evening for parents titled Creating Magic, Supporting School - Success by Reading to Your Preschooler. It will be 6:30-7:45 p.m. Tuesday, March 28, at the Livonia Civic Center Library, Farmington Road south of Five Mile in Livonia. Call (734) 744-2765, Ext. 28103, to register for this free, adults-only program.

Relay for Life offers fun for good cause

BY JULIE BROWN
STAFF WRITER

Thomas H. Brown Central City Park will be one happening place June 10-11. Those are the dates for the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life, which will run 10 a.m. Saturday to 10 a.m. Sunday.

Jenny McFarlane of the ACS is pleased with progress on the annual event, one of 42 in the metro area. A team captain meeting was held this past week with some 20 teams in place and more confirmed.

"We can always welcome more," said McFarlane, community development director, Metro-Detroit Area Service Center and liaison for the Westland event. She spoke Thursday, March 16, at Westland Rotary, urging people to get involved in the fund-raiser.

"It's a community-based event," she said.

The event is run by a committee of volunteers headed locally by co-chairs Pam Shaw and Lynette Hobyak. Teams of 10-15 people are recommended.

"You have one person on the track walking at all times," McFarlane said. "Cancer never sleeps and neither do we."

Highlights include a 4 p.m. Saturday lap to celebrate and honor cancer survivors. Around 10 p.m.

Saturday, luminaria paper bags holding candles - are lit to remember those who have lost their lives. "You get to have a connection with all these people," McFarlane said. "Family and friends have teams that are involved."

The local Web site for information is www.acsevents.org/relay/mi/westland, or you can call McFarlane at (248) 483-4343. Money raised goes toward research, education, advocacy and services for patients and families.

"We know that early detection is key," McFarlane said of cancer.

Co-chair Hobyak is excited about this year's Westland event, the sixth.

"We're just kind of getting things rolling right now," she said Thursday. She's been involved for about eight years, and is in her third as a chair.

"It seemed like a good thing to do," said Hobyak, who lost her mom to cancer after getting involved. Organizers have raised more than $100,000 a year in the past.

"It's just a good feeling," she said. "Just the community getting together and doing a positive thing."

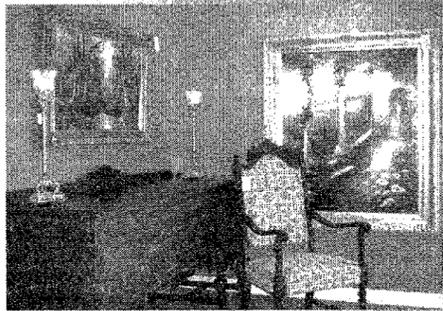

She, Shaw and other organizers are working out details. The RE/MAX Hometeam hot air balloon will again be tethered in the park.

"There's going to be a number of bands performing," Hobyak said of the entertainment, which will take place throughout the relay.

Lawson gets life in jail for 1989 Livonia murder

BY DAN WEST
STAFF WRITER

After 17 years, Victor Giller finally had his chance Tuesday to vent his family's agony, knowing the man convicted of murdering his father would have to listen.

"I would hope and pray that he confesses to anything he's done to anyone else so no one else has to go through the torment we've been put through the last 17 years," Giller said.

Giller's father, Exavor "Big John" Giller, was shot to death during a robbery at his Livonia home June 19, 1989. Earlier this month, a Wayne County Circuit Court jury found Richard Lawson guilty of first-degree murder, two counts of armed robbery and one count of felony firearm for his role in the crime.

Judge Michael Hathaway sentenced the 60-year-old California man, who once worked for Exavor Giller at his family's taxi company, to spend the rest of his life in prison without any chance of parole.

"There is no punishment in this state that can adequately punish this man for what he's done," a stern-faced Victor Giller added. "It's just too bad Michigan doesn't have the death penalty."

During Tuesday's court proceedings, Hathaway said he "wholeheartedly" agreed with the jury's decision to convict Lawson, but wishes judgment day would have come much sooner. He praised the work of investigators who were able to gather the evidence needed to bring justice in this 17-year-old case.

"People like you can run, but you cannot hide," Hathaway told Lawson.

Lawson, who entered the courtroom with a smirk on his face, said his "heart and prayers" go out to the Giller family for their loss of a loved one, but he said all the facts in the case were not heard. He added he felt his court proceedings were unfair and the trial was a "mockery of the justice system."

Lawson tried to direct blame in this murder on other people, but he never denied he shot Exavor Giller in court or to investigators.

Lawson's opportunity to speak in court was cut short by Hathaway because the judge said sentencing was not the place to retry the case.

Victor Giller said later his family, most of whom live in Livonia, was pleased the emotional ordeal was over and justice was served.

"We're just glad our mother was able to be here for this, especially at her age," he said of Catherine Giller, now 81, who was attacked and knocked unconscious shortly before her husband was shot.

Lawson plans to appeal the conviction, but Assistant Wayne County Prosecutor Rob Moran said the chances of reversal were "slim" because there was strong evidence presented in the case. Moran added murder convictions are frequently appealed.

Police consider Lawson "a person of interest" in the investigation into the Oakland County child killings, where four youngsters were found murdered in 1976-77. Sources said Lawson is among several people recently interviewed by investigators, including one person in Ohio who failed a lie-detector test. No arrests, however, have been made yet.

The breakfast may have been green eggs and ham, but the attire was strictly St. Patrick's Day for fourth-graders Amye Gnacke, Kyle Johnson, and Savannah Britt.

Schools that offer a breakfast program like Wildwood had a choice of serving the food in the morning or at lunch, but schools like nearby Madison Elementary rolled out the green eggs for lunch.

At Wildwood, fourth-graders Krista Symansic and Chealsie Miffer liked the ham, but not the eggs, while classmate Matthew Slack gave the green eggs a thumbs up.

"I think the best part is the eggs," he said. "It didn't bother me that they were green."

Matthew liked them even more after discovering he had a smiley face on the bottom of his tray, making him the winner a Major League Baseball computer game in the secret tray contest.

The green eggs and ham breakfast was only part of the activities going on at schools around the district for reading month. Many of them hosted family reading nights and some principals like Wildwood's Amy Carpenter made bets with their students in exchange for reading. Carpenter's bet was to go up in a tethered hot air balloon.

"It encourages them to read, especially about science," Carpenter said. "I hope it sparks an interest in reading. I think the kids overall enjoy it."

For Sullivan, the breakfast was nothing short of a huge success and was just the beginning of a "fantastic day" for the students. Fantastic because she planned on serving their favorite food — pizza — for lunch.

"The blessing for me is seeing their eyes shine ... and serving them healthy foods," she said. "I've been doing this for five years and seeing them eat the healthy food, that's the best part for me."

She also worked closely with fellow 18th District Court Judge C. Charles Bokos to create a program of intensive probation to help those with substantial alcohol and drug problems.

They also obtained a victim advocate to work with the victims of domestic violence, a reflection of her involvement with First Step, the western Wayne County domestic violence program. McKnight served on its board of directors for several years.

"I'm very proud of the programs that I have initiated to help and educate this community, however, it's not been done alone," she said, adding that with Bokos, Court Administrator David Wiacek and members of her personal staff and entire court staff, "I have worked to bring justice, honor and compassion, plus a strong work ethic to the job."

According to Cicirelli, who is an attorney, McKnight is known for getting things done, for her integrity and her command of the law.

"She is very knowledgeable about the law and has a good reputation among those on the bench and among attorneys," she said.

McKnight was fixture in the Westland community long before she was appointed district judge. She served on the Zoning Board of Appeals, on the Westland City Council for eight years and on the city's Bicentennial Commission. She also was the general chair of the first Westland Festival in 1971 and served on the festival committee from 1972-74.

In addition to First Step, McKnight also was president of the board of directors of the Wayne-Westland Family YMCA, the Suburban Bar Association and the Wayne County District Judges Association. She currently is secretary of the Michigan Parkinson's Foundation Board of Directors and co-facilitator of the foundation's Ann Arbor support group.

As for retiring, McKnight said her plans include finding some warm weather next winter.

"Hopefully, I can renew some friendships I haven't had time to nurture," she said. "This is a great job, but it takes a lot out of you every day, and I'm ready to give someone new an opportunity to serve our community."

still achieve."

The group meets Friday and Saturday through November at different locations around the state. This month they were in Flint, last month in Lansing.

The program gives participants the skills to facilitate public policy decisions, to serve as effective leaders and government officials and to run campaigns for political office.

McClain already is a leader. He is president of the Michigan Caucus of Black School Board Members and serves on the MASB's Leadership Training Committee. He hopes to some day lead the national school board association and admits he has his eye on political office.

"I anticipate becoming a leader and then run for a legislative position," he said. "Definitely at the state level, but after a trip to Washington, D.C., I'm suddenly been interested in that."

When is the last time you did something out of the ordinary?

Whether it was last year, last month, last week, or last night, we are challenging you to "Change Your World @ Your Library" April 2-8. That's the theme for National Library Week this year and at the William P. Faust Library, we've got contests and programs to help you do just that.

With all the natural disasters in the past few years, along with the dip in the economy, more people than ever need a helping hand from others. By helping to provide clean, safe housing to these people, you can change their world, and you might just change your own in the process.

Habitat for Humanity will be here at 7 p.m. Tuesday, April 4, to show you how they are helping those left homeless by Hurricane Katrina, tsunamis, or those who just can't afford a decent place to live. Please call the Reference Desk to register.

Our other adult program for the week is "Change Your World... One Room at a Time." This program will feature an interior decorator who will help give ideas for updating your home décor.

The program will be at 2 p.m. Saturday, April 8, and you can register by calling the library. Everyone attending either of the adult programs will be entered into a prize drawing.

The children's story time on April 3 will end with a craft that will be given to the library's homebound patrons, proving that no one is too young to change someone's world.

There also will be two family movie days. The featured movies are Chicken Little, showing 1 p.m. Sunday, April 2, and The Chronicles of Narnia, showing at 1 p.m. Saturday, April 8. Call the Children's Desk to register or for more information.

In addition to special programs, there will be plenty of contests during the week. The Young Adult department will be holding a raffle and giving away bookstore gift cards.

There will be a scavenger hunt in both the adult and children's departments. Everyone who participates will receive a prize and one winner will be picked daily for a bookstore gift card.

Finally, people who check out items during National Library Week will be entered into a raffle. Among the prizes are gift certificates for laser tag, cosmic bowling, the Detroit Science Center, and dinner for four at the Rainforest Café, all designed to help your change your world by trying something new.

So, whether you're looking to get out of a rut, or always on the hunt for something new, the library is the perfect place to be April 2-8.

Internet 101: 10:30 a.m. March 28. For the very beginner. What the Internet is and how to get there. No registration or fee required.

Program looks at identity theft

State Sen. Laura M. Toy, R-Livonia, in cooperation with the Livonia Police Department, is offering a special presentation to educate residents about how to protect themselves from identity theft.

The featured speaker will be Sandra Hoffman, the interim director of the Identity Theft Program at Michigan State University.

"Unfortunately, identity theft continues to be a growing crime in our country," Sen. Toy said. "This is a great opportunity for people to learn the information that they don't get in the 30 second soundbite on the evening news, and what to do if they become a victim."

The presentation will be 7-8:30 p.m. Monday, March 27, in the Activity Room at the Livonia Senior Center, 15218 Farmington Road, south of Plymouth Road, Livonia.

Residents of Garden City, Livonia, Redford Township and Westland, and their guests are welcome to attend. There is no charge for the presentation.

For more information, residents can call Toy's office at (517) 373-1707 or visit her Web site at www.senate.michigan.gov/toy.

Franklin students pitch in pennies for patients

Franklin Middle School students waged a penny-collection campaign that raised $2,124 for the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society.

Students from the Wayne school raised the money Feb. 13-24 to help the LLS's Pennies for Patient's program, which aims to find cures for leukemia, lymphoma and myeloma. It also provides services to help patients from the diagnosis stage through treatment and recovery.

Franklin administrators embraced having young people reach out to those in need.

"Student involvement with the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society reinforces the importance of community service," school coordinator Jill Kunnath said. "I am so proud of our students and how they have come together and raised (over) $2,000 for a great cause. They have gone above and beyond my expectations."

During the 2005-6 school year, more than eight million students in 15,000 U.S. schools raised $13 million for the Pennies for Patients program.

"This really shows kids that they have the power to make a dramatic difference in the lives of people who need their help," said Heather Ferrand, campaign manager for the Michigan chapter.

Bill would regulate protests at military funerals

BY ALEX LUNDBERG
STAFF WRITER

After members of an extreme fundamentalist church in Kansas protested the funeral of a Michigan man killed in Iraq, a member of the U.S. House of Representatives has crafted legislation to control what can and can't go on outside memorial services.

U.S. Rep. Mike Rogers, R-Brighton, was in attendance at the March 11 funeral for Michigan National Guard Sgt. Joshua Youmans in Flushing when he ran into members of the Westboro Baptist Church who were there to protest. What he saw turned his stomach.

"It was a difficult time for the family, they were mourning a son, husband and father," Rogers said. "The protesters were hateful, harassing and taunting."

The Westboro Baptist Church, on the Web at god-hatesfags.com., has made news around the country by holding protests at the funerals of service men and women killed in Iraq. The group is neither anti-nor prowar, rather they hold that America's tolerance of homosexuals has raised God's ire and caused the devastation of Hurricane Katrina, the Virginia coal mine disaster and the deaths of American soldiers by explosive devices in Iraq.

The group regularly appears at the funerals of American servicemen and women with signs and chants to remind the grieving of why they think their loved one died.

"Their speech is hateful and harassing," Rogers said. "They attack the families verbally, it's vile."

Frank Campanaro, a retired

Army Ranger from Auburn Hills, was preparing a charity event for wounded soldiers when one of his contacts told him about what was going to happen in Flushing. He called his friends in several Genesee County biker clubs, many of whom are Vietnam veterans, and tried to give the family some cover on the fly.

"We had 250 vets on cycles show up and another 250 people on foot," Campanaro said. "The Governor showed up, (Rep.) Rogers showed up. We drowned them out."

The counter-protest was calm, if noisy, even though Campanaro himself didn't know if he was going to end up in handcuffs with an assault charge at the end of the day.

"I was wondering if today was the day I'd be going to jail," he said. "You have a right to free speech, definitely. You have a right to protest. But if you're for or against the war, for or against the president, protesting a funeral is not right."

But even "vile" speech is still protected by the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution as is the right to peaceably assemble. Rogers says his legislation takes that into account.

"The Supreme Court has ruled that the government can regulate the time, place and manner that protects the right to protest and protects the families," Rogers said.

Specifically, the legislation allows protests to go on an hour before or an hour after a funeral and at least 500 feet away from the service venue. He says the bill has wide support in Congress.

Schoolcraft celebrates diversity with fair

Cultures from around the globe will share their food, language and customs at the fifth annual Schoolcraft College Multicultural Fair Wednesday, March 29.

The fair is a celebration of the many ethnicities represented among the student population on the Schoolcraft campus, with displays prepared by students, instructors and staff as well as their families and friends.

The fair will be held from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the VisITaTech Center's DiPonio Room. It is free and open to the public, with continuous performances and demonstrations. Visitors can experience the food, language and artistic expression of about 20 countries from Europe, Asia, the Middle East and South America.

There will be language demonstrations, henna painting, Native American drumming, Indian folk dancing and Irish step dancing.

Beside promoting cultural sensitivity and increasing an awareness and appreciation of other cultures, the fair extends education beyond classroom walls by exposing students, faculty, staff and the community to a cross-cultural experience. It also creates an opportunity for students to teach others.

Ernie and Tram host Library Day at Comerica

May 2 has been designated as the second annual Michigan Public Libraries Day at Comerica Park by the Michigan Library. The Ernie and Tram Go to Bat for Michigan Public Libraries program encourages public library supporters to attend the May 21 game and see the Detroit Tigers play the Cincinnati Reds.

Nine dollars from every $20 ticket sold by libraries will be used to create endowments at public libraries in Michigan.

Hall of Fame broadcaster Ernie Harwell and former Detroit Tigers manager Alan Trammell are well aware that libraries have, for a number of years, faced critical funding shortages and this program is designed to help libraries build strong financial bases.

"We had a great first year supporting libraries and baseball and I am looking forward to an even bigger second year," said Harwell. "I encourage all library supporters to join me on Sunday, May 21, at 1:05 at Comerica Park."

"I enjoy working with library supporters who are also great Tiger fans!" said Trammell.

Last year more than $15,000 was raised, enabling public libraries in Clare, Gaylord, Hesperia, Homer, Houghton Lake, Menominee, Oxford, Saginaw and Three Rivers to start endowments. In addition to the money generated by ticket sales, each library that applies for endowment funding is required to raise matching funds.

As a special treat before the game on May 21, the Detroit Public Library (located at 5201 Woodward Ave.) will be open from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., allowing library ticket purchasers to visit the Lulu and Ernie Harwell Collection. Harwell will be at the library from 10:30 a.m. to noon to talk with fans about the collection, as well as the importance of supporting Michigan's public libraries.

To order tickets for the May 21 Detroit Tigers vs. Cincinnati Reds game, contact your local public libraries. Those who don't live near a participating library may download an order form at <http://woodlands.lib.mi.us/tickets.pdf> or call (800) 962-4472.

The Library of Michigan is part of the Department of History, Arts and Libraries (HAL) and sponsor of the event.

OUR VIEWS

Library Week is good time to visit

Next week, the William P. Faust Public Library will join libraries around the state and the country in observing National Library Week. It's a time to celebrate the contributions of our libraries and librarians and to promote library use and support.

A lot has changed at libraries since the observance first began in 1958. Back then, you tracked down books using an index file and a card tucked in the pocket of the front cover was hand-stamped with the date the book had to be returned.

The age of technology has replaced those services, but the books and the wonders they offer are still there to explore, whether turning the page of a book or surfing the Internet.

Westland's library is techno-savvy, with computers that let residents find the book they want with the click of a few keys. It's on the forefront of the information age. In a world that's information rich, the library is information smart and helps ensure that everyone is information literate.

The library also is unique in person and online. Where else can you have access to nearly anything on the Web or in print as well as personal service and assistance in finding it?

The theme of this year's National Library Week is "Change Your World @ Your Library," and the Westland public library has plenty of activities planned to celebrate.

You can learn about Habitat for Humanity and how it is helping those left homeless by Hurricane Katrina or "Change Your World ... One Room at a Time" with the help of an interior decorator. There will be movies for children, scavenger hunt and raffles, including one for people who check out items during the week.

If you're a regular library patron, National Library Week is a good time to stop by and thank the staff and the Friends for the Library for all they do.

If you have never been or only once in a blue moon, it's the perfect time to stop by and rediscover your public library. Who knows, you may find a good book or periodical to read or a video to watch and win a prize.

Trip right on over to better roads

There's been good news and bad coming out of the tri-county area in the last week. The good news is that many of our roads are going to be repaired or reconstructed this year.

And the bad news? Of course, it's that many of our roads will be repaired or reconstructed this year.

This is one time, however, when the good news outweighs the bad. It costs big bucks to do road construction, and coming up with the funding has been tough in years past. For instance, the Road Commission for Oakland County plans to spend $54 million on road projects this year alone. One construction project — the Northwestern corridor — doesn't even have a price tag yet.

In Wayne County, there are plans for a $37.8 million reconstruction of M-14 from Haggerty Road to the Washtenaw/Wayne county line. Another major project is the underpass on Sheldon Road and CSX track. Cost is $12 million, but local officials are waiting for federal funding to the tune of $4.7 million that is earmarked for the project.

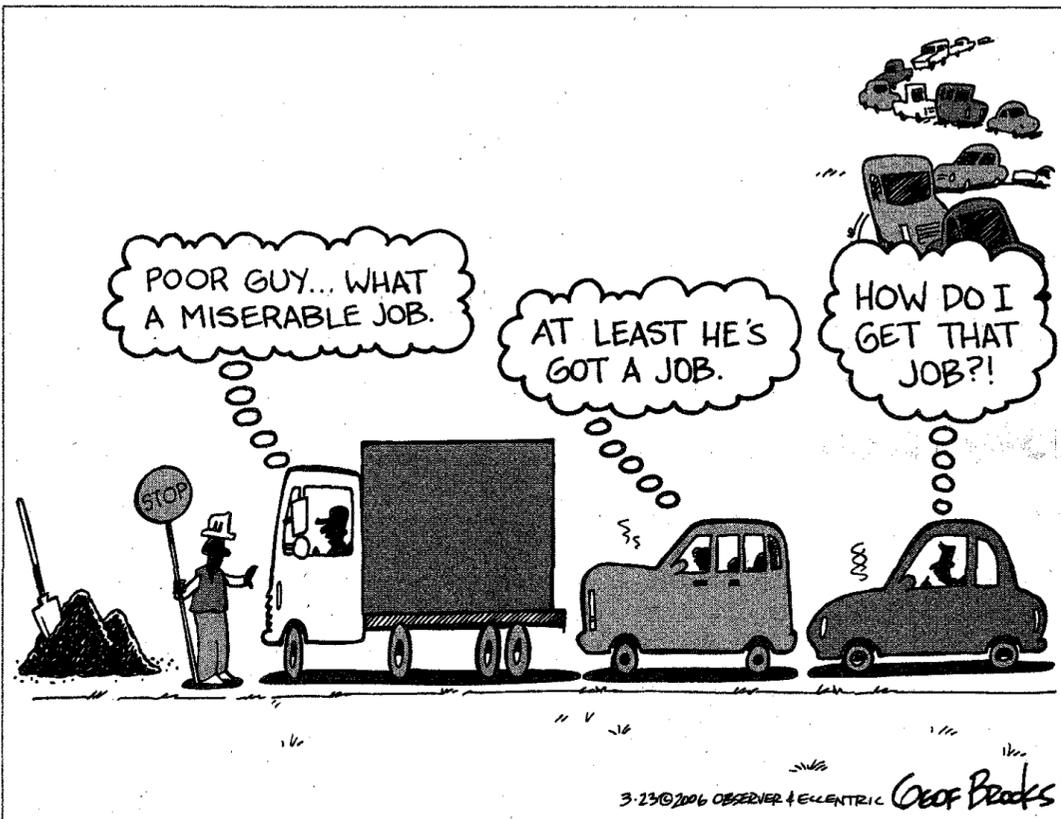

The good news comes from a plan outlined by Gov. Jennifer Granholm that would use bond sales to fund the local city and county portions — roughly $80 million — of road repairs. It is expected that will produce $320 million for the road projects.

Forget the moving pothole crews you swing around on the freeway. That good news means those sinkholes you're dodging while going to work, or even just to the grocery store, will get a permanent fix.

Besides the thousands of jobs that will be created by the road projects which were already announced, Granholm's plan and the economic investment spurred by a good transportation system will translate into more people earning — and spending — cash.

Those are the points we'll all have to remember as we deal with the perennial bad news in Michigan — orange barrels that cause no end of headaches.

But, hey, spring arrived Monday. So roll down your windows and smell the countryside ... better make that the fumes from the car ahead.

Decision was a farce

Regarding the Westland City Planning Commission denial of the proposed Advance Auto Parts store, I'm disappointed with how this latest battle played out. What was certainly an openness on the petitioner's part to "play ball" was "rained out" due to an "argumentative attitude" by both sides. Cooler heads "should" have prevailed, but too many feathers were ruffled and the city decided to take its ball and go home.

I'm sure the "truth" lies somewhere in between: "Gosh, gee-wilakers the city e-mail system failed and we only got the plans Friday" or "Handicapped parking placement to footcandle regulations."

They want to make money selling auto parts, you need the tax dollars ... compromise. I sure as heck heard someone called a liar, so apologize and get some revenue for the city coffers. Instead we get sued and lose a retailer.

That said, I'm always happy with Bruce Thompson's work, even treatment of petitioners and overall professionalism, however, even he got flustered during this debacle.

I am very concerned that the city attorney didn't respond to Advance Auto's request for a meeting prior to the second planning commission date. Talk about a chess game!

A better solution would have been to take Petitioner Sharpe's suggestion and approve contingent upon the planning commission recommendations or even postpone like Mr. Lipinsky advised.

I hope Westland doesn't look forward to a lawsuit just because the commission got rattled by Advance Auto's mouthpiece or total unresponsiveness by the city attorney.

You all normally do a great job for the city, but this is an absolute farce. I'd suggest some folks involved need to apologize, shake hands, get down to business

Birthday exhibit canceled

With regrets the Friends of the Westland Historical Museum have canceled the Celebration of the Westland's 40th Birthday Exhibit at the Museum at 857 N. Wayne Road.

The three rooms needed for the Exhibit at the Helen C. Brown Westland Historical Museum were the two front rooms and the enclosed back porch. Plans were to remove all items from these rooms except the showcases. The large kitchen stove would be left in the kitchen, and the 1900 organ and the mirrored buffet would be moved to the north room not being used for the exhibit.

A proposal was made to the historical commission to use one room at the 1837 Rowe House for storage of all other items. A major restriction by some of the commissioners was the Rowe House could not be used for storage.

This made it impossible for the Friends project to happen. I don't understand. This building now has items stored in it. It was necessary recently for the commission to move items from the Carriage Shed to the Rowe House in order to make room for the 1919 Eloise Fire Engine.

The mold issue in the Rowe House has been resolved. With no utilities in the building, heat was an issue for some. This should not have been a concern since the exhibit would run from May through September.

As a part of the exhibit, Friends requested painting over wallpaper in the two front rooms, adding 1960s wallpaper on two walls. Friends of the Museum made an offer to purchase and install new wallpaper after the exhibit was closed. It was a NO by some of the commissioners to change the walls.

Displays were planned that would interest all ages. It was to be a fun, educational and interesting '60s exhibit, a temporary five-month exhibit. Another important factor was the '60s exhibit would have brought people of all ages from Westland as well as neighboring communities to the museum site. Several years ago, we were criticized for not serving the general population, specifically children and young families.

Thanks to Josephine Capra, Meghan Chatham, Judy Cornfoot, Peggy Gatteri, Greenmead, Ken and Fran Hahn, Dorothy Krueger, Sue Mason, Al Olweean, Donna Slem, Diane Winfrey and several Friends of the Museum who loaned or donated items to help make the '60s exhibit a success.

Sorry for the inconvenience to those who had already brought items to the museum. Items are being returned as soon as possible. A special thanks to David Carrick, project chairman, for his passion and countless hours put forth for this activity.

Decision wasn't 'groovy'

Members of the Friends of the Westland Historical Museum aren't in a very "groovy" mood.

Plans were well under way for the Friends presenting an exciting exhibit celebrating the city of Westland's 40th Birthday. When I first proposed the idea, back in January, members of the Historical Commission said they didn't believe there was enough time to put such an elaborate exhibit together, but gave the OK. I knew the Friends could do it, and we knuckled down and got to work.

As word got out about what we were doing and the items we were looking for, residents truly showed interest as they flocked to the museum with several early 1960s items.

We were offered everything from a 1966 Pontiac GTO convertible to a Vietnam MIA bracelet for use in the various displays. And rest assured that G.I. Joe would have been in good company with Mary Poppins and Mr. Machine in the toys display.

Then, two months into the planning, the Westland Historical Commission held a special meeting where it issued a laundry list of restrictions that would have been impossible to meet and still be able to provide residents with the array of quality displays that had been planned.

Instead of embracing the idea of such a unique, informative exhibit taking place and offering solutions to some problems that had come up, several Historical Commission members just added more limitations to the list.

One major concern of the Friends 40th Birthday Committee that needed to be addressed was the proper storage for the exhibits now on display in the museum. The Rowe Meeting House is presently used only for storage; the Friends had hoped to use one of the empty rooms in that building for the temporary storage of the items. The Historical Commission said the Rowe House was not to be used. It failed, however, to offer any alternative locations.

Personally, I felt it would be a little difficult to be climbing over antique washers to see a lava lamp or straddle an antique sewing machine to check the time on the sunburst clock.

The Historical Commission also said it would not allow any fresh paint or wallpaper to be used. With so many restrictions and limitations issued, I called for — and the Friends Birthday committee concurred with — cancellation of the exhibit.

The Friends may not be able to share the exhibit with fellow residents, but the research we had completed sure did bring back a lot of great memories. Now grab that "One Way" bottle of Pepsi and "Pop" the bubble on the trouble game, it's your turn.

David Carrick
chairman, 40th Birthday Committee
Friends of the Westland Historical Museum

Acted responsibly

The Westland Historical Commission's responsibilities include preservation and maintenance of the historical buildings and antique artifacts donated to them.

I believe the commission acted in a responsible way when it told the Birthday Committee that it could not store the valuable antique furniture in a house with no heat, no alarm system and boarded up. Also, the request to paint and wallpaper over existing wallpaper was denied.

We are willing to work with alternate solutions concerning the antique furniture storage and suggestions on exhibits, but the Birthday Committee was not willing to compromise.

We would like to thank the people who were willing to donate articles pertaining to the 1960s, but under the circumstances, it looks like the furniture exhibit will not exist, but there will be displays at the museum pertaining to the city's 40th birthday celebration.

Our fundamental purposes are to enhance the lives of our readers, nurture the hometowns we serve and contribute to the business success of our customers.

Initial conference hopefully first step to a real solution

"We are in a pickle. The state of Michigan is in the midst of serious structural economic trouble, probably its worst crisis in our lifetime. Since 2001, the state has lost one-quarter of its automotive work force and is in its sixth consecutive year of job loss, a period of decline unequalled in the 50 years for which we have data."

— George Fulton, University of Michigan economics professor

That dash of cold water from a nationally recognized authority was just one of many bracing moments at "Where Do We Go From Here?" last week's economic policy agenda-setting conference in Ann Arbor.

Two hundred fifty policy experts and civic leaders gave up their entire day to take turns listening to detailed policy papers and then huddling in small groups to discuss Michigan's situation — which vitally concerns all of us.

The objective of the conference, co-sponsored by The Center for Michigan and U-M's Center for Local, State and Urban Policy, was to see if a cross-section of Michigan's leaders could reach broad agreement on an economic policy agenda that could work — and make a major impact.

And, remarkably, though it was a highly diverse group, broad agreement was reached on a number of topics. They included:

■ The vast majority of the public woefully lacks understanding about the true nature of our state's present financial circumstances.

For example: Michigan has a reputation as a high tax state, but we actually rank below average. We were 29th in the nation in state and local taxes as a percentage of personal income for 2002, the last year for which data are available. That's down considerably from 1972, when only a dozen states ranked above us. The experts' best guess is that we may be even lower today.

■ Michigan's government is also, believe it or not, malnourished. The state has experienced a $1 billion-plus state operating budget deficit for the past six years. The politicians have covered the deficit by cannibalizing rainy day funds and selling off assets. But without serious structural tax and spending reform, this deficit can only get worse, according to Tom Clay, the highly respected budget expert of the non-partisan Citizens Research Council.

And our leaders' actual spending patterns seem bizarrely out of whack. For example, conferees were astonished to discover that Michigan spends $1.8 billion on our prison system in 2006 — with substantially higher incarceration rate and operating costs than our neighboring states.

This expenditure just about equals the total amount we spend on all our colleges and universities. We spend more to keep a prisoner behind bars each year than it would cost to send them to Harvard Law School.

Participants wondered if very expensively warehousing felons was more important to us than educating our young people.

The conference agreed far-reaching tax reform is necessary, beginning with the Single Business Tax. Most felt the SBT has become politically so unpopular that, as a practical matter, any serious discussion of tax reform must take on the SBT, either by substantial revision or outright repeal.

However, an equally strong consensus was that any revenue loss from SBT reform or repeal must be replaced. Not doing so would be, "financially irresponsible to an extreme degree," according to Michigan State University Professor Charles Ballard. A review of state-by-state economic data revealed that no evidence could be found that further tax cuts, in and of themselves, could contribute in any serious way to economic growth.

The leading candidate to plug the $1.9 billion hole left if the SBT was repealed is extending the sales tax, now levied on goods, to services while reducing the rate from the current 6 percent. Another possibility, politically less popular, would be to make the state income tax more progressive.

The conference also examined issues of competitive advantage for Michigan's economy and actual spending patterns in labor force skills and education. Participants agreed that it is vital for Michiganders to come to terms with the fact that the state is deep into a fundamental transition from a relatively low-skilled manufacturing base to a higher skill and knowledge-based economy.

To that end, conferees agreed that Michigan needed to make substantial investments in education and knowledge infrastructure.

Education, ranging from very early childhood through high school and on through community college and four-year and graduate universities, was regarded as suffering from years of underinvestment by the state.

Lately, the lack of investment has turned into something even worse — actual budget cuts, which threaten to cripple our future.

Many participants expressed frustration that many basic issues lying at the heart of Michigan's economic crisis have not been addressed by our state's leaders. They believed many Michigan citizens were yearning for a way to express their concerns and get something practical done without political posturing or ideological diatribe.

As a co-sponsor of the conference, I ended the day by saying that "a successful conference is just the first step in a journey of structural reform that could last many miles," while pledging that our new think-and-do tank, The Center for Michigan, was committed to investing in the process for the long haul.

Whether the conference turns out to be a one-day, flash in the pan, or the start of something really big will depend on the willingness of people to step forward. As the famous comment goes, all that is necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men and women to do nothing.

Phil Power is a longtime observer of Michigan politics, public policy and economics. He is the founder of The Center for Michigan, which co-sponsored the conference in Ann Arbor. For more information, go to www.thecenterformichigan.net.

Steering clear of trouble means using common sense

You know there's trouble ahead, at least you think you do, when traffic comes to a dead halt on southbound I-75 at 9 in the morning.

Slowly you inch your way forward for miles. Finally, you see the accident in which a car came to rest in the median. There was a tow truck and two police cars, narrowing the number of useable lanes on the freeway.

All are understandable reasons for snarling traffic. The only problem with this scenario, however, is that the accident was on northbound I-75, opposite the direction in which I was creeping along.

There was absolutely no reason for traffic to put on the brakes, but drivers couldn't resist the urge to take a long, slow look at the accident. There oughta be a law against that.

Fortunately, to my knowledge, such irresponsible driving didn't cause another accident on our side of the road.

Which leads me to the results of a national survey conducted, in part, by Precision Tune Auto Care. The survey addresses issues with teen driving practices. But after reading some of the results, it occurred to me that they directly reflect some of the bad examples set by adults.

For instance, don't drive while you're angry, said PTAC staffer Joel Burrows, who is known in some circles as The Car Doctor.

Oops! That certainly applied to me that recent morning, but he was talking about the kind of road rage that causes aggressive driving. Defensive driving is what's called for on the road, such as watching for brake lights coming on ahead of the car that's right in front of you.

But there are a lot of maddening things that one encounters, particularly on the freeway. They include drivers cutting in and out of traffic, and drivers of SUVs thinking that because they have an all wheel drive vehicle that they can zip down the freeway with impunity.

I think they cause accidents among those of us trying to stay out of their way.

Sandra Armbruster

But there are a lot of maddening things that one encounters, particularly on the freeway. They include drivers cutting in and out of traffic, and drivers of SUVs thinking that because they have an all wheel drive vehicle that they can zip down the freeway with impunity.

But back to the survey. The car doc tells teens to drive only when sober, not to talk on their cell phones when driving and to turn down that radio.

It's good advice; in fact, it's so good that parents ought to heed it as well. Those folks facing drug court for substance abuse, including alcohol, are by and large adults. And on any one drive, one can find someone at the wheel trying to balance a cell phone while making a turn. Cell phone use, according to the report, accounts for 6 percent of all accidents in the U.S.

As for loud radios, adults trade that trait in for applying makeup or shaving, actually watching small in dash TVs and using computer equipment.

The point of Burrows' comments is that drivers need to be focused on what they're doing, on the road and on what other drivers are doing.

A lot of what he said is common sense, like not falling asleep at the wheel. But common sense seems to be in short supply when it comes to maneuvering in traffic.

The survey was conducted after agencies became aware that teens have twice the rate of fatalities as in car accidents overall. That's scary news, and the aim of the survey was not only to gather information, but to help educate teens.

For Burrows, driving safely comes down to two basic things: Buckle up and observe posted speed limits.

It's all a way to avoid trouble ahead.

Regional cooperation focus of Tri-County Summit

BY ALEX LUNDBERG
STAFF WRITER

With the understanding there are things everyone agrees on and things they don't, representatives of Oakland, Wayne and Macomb Counties and the City of Detroit got together Monday to talk about those topics where their interests overlapped.

The Tri-County Summit, formerly an annual get-together of community leaders from all over southeast Michigan, met at Glen Oaks Country Club early this week to share plans for regional cooperation and cost savings and, possibly, lay the groundwork for further cooperation in the future.

One of the topics up for discussion was jail diversion, clearing nonviolent cases out of the regular correction system that could be better served in a substance abuse or mental health setting. Mark Metalski from the Oakland County Sheriff's office said it's not a way of excusing behavior, rather a way of taking people out of a place that can't address the problem.

"Jail is not set up for the needs of mental health," Metalski said. "This has a positive impact on jail overcrowding and lets corrections officers focus on the most dangerous inmates."

While it's almost an axiom that a get tough on crime posture is gold for a politician, Oakland County Commissioner Helaine Zack, D-Huntington Woods, said times are different now.

"(Jail diversion) isn't such a tough sell as it was five years ago," she said. "Jail overcrowding is everyone's issue. You don't want a low-level mental health offender taking up a bed in a jail."

SEMCOG Executive Director Paul Tait laid out a laundry list of problems the region has with its infrastructure. He said there are four realities community leaders have to face up to.

"Infrastructure is essential to business and quality of life, we need to get more out of our investment," he said. "We have to look at infrastructure holistically and there's not enough money to get everything done."

He said there are 22,800 miles of road in the state and 950 miles of those are in poor condition, 800 miles are congested. There are 3,560 bridges in southeast Michigan and more than 1,300 are deficient. All of those numbers are expected to grow within the next 20 years.

"There are 3,500 miles of distribution mains in the Detroit Water and Sewerage system and another 9,000 miles in customer communities," Tait said. "If population growth follows forecasts, we'll need 5,000 more miles of mains."

As if the laundry list weren't enough, he added that none of the items were adequately funded for the future. Multiple revenue streams, inconsistent maintenance and the addressing of infrastructure issues independently and in isolation of each other has caused a dramatic gap between what the region needs and what it's budgeted to get.

"The physical plants were built 30 to 50 years ago and had a 30 to 50 year life," Tait said. "By the year 2000 the region was 32 percent developed. By 2030, it will be 50 percent developed. There has been no adequate investment and there will be a $100 billion shortfall over the next 25 years."

The net effect, he said, will be diminished quality of life and business environment.

Oakland County Commissioner Chuck Moss, R-Birmingham, said the Tri-County Summit was about common ground.

"It's a process to get the three counties and the city to talk about their common interests," he said. "It's about finding consensus, not about being a battle ground. It's like a regional UN, not a social event."
